

ABSTRACT

A face-seal interface for a respiratory mask utilizing an elastomer containing precipitated particles on its surface to provide a more comfortable long-term engagement with the skin of a wearer. A particle filled bladder forming the face-seal interface keeps a set shape and improves user comfort.